The government has adopted a draft law on artificial intelligence systems. It is intended to implement the AI Act in Poland

The Council of Ministers has adopted a draft law on artificial intelligence systems, aimed at implementing the EU Artificial Intelligence Act (AI Act) in Poland. Prepared by the Ministry of Digital Affairs, the draft provides for the establishment of a national framework for supervising the use and development of AI systems.

A key element of the proposed regulation is the creation of the Commission for the Development and Security of Artificial Intelligence, which will act as the supervisory authority. The Commission will be responsible for conducting administrative proceedings, issuing decisions and imposing sanctions for breaches of the regulations.

The draft law introduces a ban on the use of the most high-risk and dangerous AI applications and provides users with the right to submit complaints. At the same time, it includes measures to support innovation, such as the creation of so-called regulatory sandboxes that will allow new solutions to be tested under controlled conditions.

The regulation is intended to protect citizens' rights, increase transparency in the use of artificial intelligence and establish a framework for the lawful development of this technology in Poland.

CERT Orange forecasts that AI will be used to automate further stages of cyberattacks in 2026

CERT Orange forecasts that in 2026 artificial intelligence will be increasingly used to automate successive stages of cyberattacks.

According to the Orange Polska team, AI is already supporting, among others, the creation of more convincing phishing content and may soon take over additional elements of attacks, such as target reconnaissance, selection of attack vectors and dynamic adjustment of techniques to the victim's responses. Experts point out that AI driven automation lowers the barrier to entry for cybercriminals and enables attacks to be carried out on a larger scale with lower resource requirements.

At the same time, AI is also being deployed on the defensive side, including for anomaly detection, network traffic analysis and faster incident response. CERT Orange emphasizes that the growing role of AI in cyber threats will require the continued development of protective tools as well as increased awareness among users and organizations.
