The European Commission strikes at Huawei as a 5G supplier. "Few countries have removed Chinese equipment"

The European Commission has once again highlighted the risks associated with the use of Huawei equipment in European 5G networks, noting that despite years of recommendations, few member states have taken real action to limit the involvement of Chinese suppliers. Since 2020, the EC has recommended excluding "high-risk" vendors from critical infrastructure, and in 2024 further tightened its stance by designating Huawei as such an entity and calling for the gradual withdrawal of its equipment.

EC spokesperson Thomas Regnier pointed out that the lack of response from most countries remains an issue, while Vice-President Henna Virkkunen is pushing for the possibility of additional restrictions. Meanwhile, the presentation of the EU Cybersecurity Act has been postponed by one week. According to the March 2025 declaration of Poland's Ministry of Digital Affairs, Poland does not plan bans or limitations, and Chinese equipment remains a key element of national infrastructure: it is used in 5G, and around 60% of the 4G network relies on Huawei solutions.
