More than half of Poles want 5G. Most of them want the network to be built by Polish firms

by PS

According to "5G Made in Poland" survey, which was conducted by SW Research at the request of Ericsson, 52% of Poles declare their willingness to use 5G services offered by their operator within a year from launch of a 5G network.

Most of all, the customers expect faster Internet access from 5G thanks to increased link throughputs (27.9% of the survey's participants). Other factors which are important for the survey's participants include data security (18.8%) and better mobile communications coverage (15.7%).

In the opinion of 63.4% of the survey's participants introduction of 5G technology in Poland will increase the competitiveness of Polish economy as compared to other European markets.

According to the participants, telecommunications will be the sector which will benefit most from widespread use of the new technology (63.4%), followed by education (26.8%) and entertainment (20.6%).

More than half of the survey's participants are of the opinion that local companies should be responsible for the roll-out and development of 5G in Poland, with the companies from the USA or Asia being less welcome.

16.9% of the respondents would like to try 5G in the first month after the services start being offered by their operator, with another 35.1% willing to do so during a year since launch. On the other hand, 27.2% of Poles are not interested in the new standard at all and have no intention of using it.
